Thanks to Vicki Walker, Our Schools are Much Safer.

To some, my son Jarred was a statistic—one of 2,500 school children who are injured each year from wired glass in school doors—but to Vicki Walker, he was a child who needed someone to speak on his behalf.

After Jarred's hand went through a door at the University of Oregon, I contacted Vicki. She immediately understood the dangers of this product, not only to my son, but also to every school-aged child in the state.

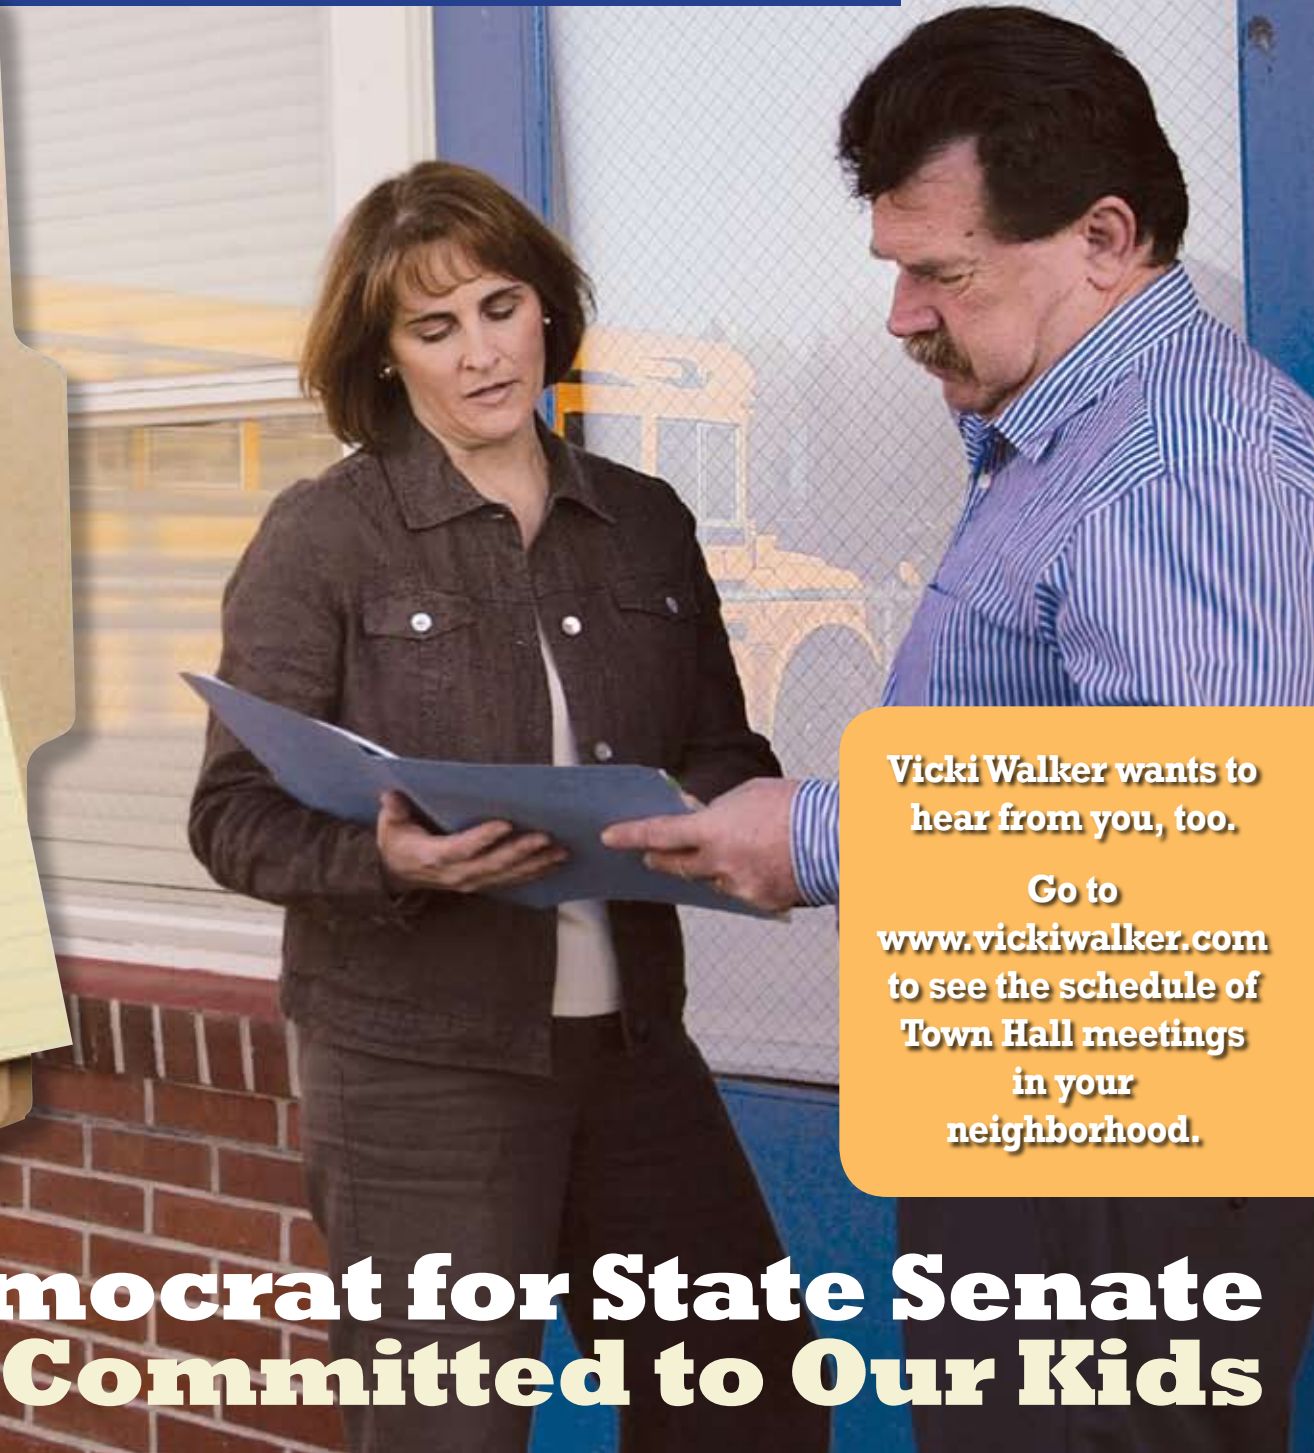

Vicki fought through bureaucracies in Salem and Washington, D.C. She overcame the special interests who cared more about their bottom line and succeeded in getting our government to adopt new safety standards.

In fact, Oregon led the way as the first state in the nation to require safer glass in our schools.

School doors are supposed to open to a brighter future for our children. Thanks to Vicki Walker, they will. That's why she has my support.

Sincerely,

Greg Abel
